Shaun initially started with British Rail as a trainee technician and rose to Technician Officer in charge of a faulting team covering the whole signalling area before deciding to move to Bristol to become a New Works Tester.

He was in charge of the Test Section for Amey Rail in Bristol. Bristol was in need of resignalling, and Shaun took the opportunity to move to a manufacturing company Signalling Solutions (now Alstom) to become Tester-in-Charge of the 100-million-pound scheme.

Shaun is on the Board of GRAAY[®] Limited as director of Signalling operations and provides governance and oversight of all our signalling operations for a range of companies in need of this expertise and experience.

When he is not working, he loves rebuilding Lambrettas and Vespas and is a lifelong scooterist.
